

ARCHITECTURE AND HISTORIC HOMES

National Register of Historic Places

Scope and Content

This series consists of three historical surveys of Waltham including: Joel Grushkin's 1978 survey; Peter Bernson's 1984 survey; and Ed Gorton's 1986 survey. Known as the Waltham National Register Multiple Resource Nomination, the surveys indicate houses that have been placed on the Waltham Historical Commission, the Massachusetts Historical Commission, and the National lists of historic sites. Each historic house has a brief description, which includes date of construction, style and features, size and history. Each description is generally one or two pages long.

The introduction to the earliest survey, done by Joel Grushkin in 1979, describes the methods used for his selection of historic sites. It provides a description of Waltham architecturally, economically, socially and historically. It also includes briefs looks at some of Waltham's Historic districts. This information is expanded in the 1986 survey. The Gorton survey includes much information on the Moody Street and Central Square districts, the Watch Factory district, Lyman Street, Main and Lexington Streets. No introduction to the Bernson survey is included here.

Also in this series is the 1998 State Register of Historic Places for Massachusetts which lists historic buildings and districts in Massachusetts. A complete list of Waltham National Register buildings is also found in this series. Finally, street indices are included and are arranged by date and street name.

Arrangement

The series of national register buildings is arranged alphabetically by street name and then chronologically by house number. The introductions to two of the three surveys precede the series along with the current full state register of historic places. Street and date indices to the Historical Commission lists of Historic houses are also housed in the beginning of the series. The house descriptions themselves have been combined to ease informational retrieval.
